RESIDENT BEGINS 3RD YEAR; THINGS VASTLY DIFFERENT

Roosevelt Today Confronted With A Legislative Crisis

RELIEF REBELLION

Readiness of Congress to Vote
Soldiers' Bonus Considered
As A Threat

By George R. Holmes
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, D. C., Mar. 4.—President Roosevelt began his third year in the White House today under conditions vastly different from that of his first year, two years ago, yet strangely reminiscent.

Now, as then, he is confronted with nothing of a crisis. Two years ago was financial. He was induced into office to the doleful dirge of bank notes hanging shut. Today his crisis is legislative.

Foremost is the Senate rebellion against the $4,880,000,000 Works Relief bill.

Next is the readiness of Congress to vote the $2,500,000,000 Soldiers' Bonus bill which would upset Mr. Roosevelt's plans and perhaps lead to currency inflation, upon which he is not willing to embark.

Then there is the deadlock over his social security program which involves old age pensions and some form of employment insurance, and the fact that a hostile Senate is preparing a vigorous investigation into the operations of the NRA, keystone of the Roosevelt recovery program.

The next bi-county meeting will be held in Quakertown, March 21st. Mrs. Albert Downing will be the delegate. Mrs. Benjamin Ahart will be chairman for the March card party to be held at the American Legion home.

Father and Son Injured When A Motorcycle Skids

A father and son, William A. Thomas and William R. Thomas, respectively, both of 84 Sanger street, Philadelphia, were injured yesterday afternoon when the motorcycle on which they were riding is said to have skidded at the intersection of Newport and Newportville Roads.

The two were thrown from the motorcycle. The father was treated at Harriman Hospital for lacerated and contused wound of the left ankle; and the son for laceration over the left eye in which one stitch was taken. The latter also had brush burns of the left knee and left hand. After treatment the two returned home.

Bristol Historian Will Address Legion Members

Doron Green, Bristol historian, has accepted an invitation to address the American Legion Tuesday evening and his topic will be "The History of Radcliffe Street."

It has been the custom of the local Legion Post to have a prominent speaker once each month.

THINKS CONVENTION NO AID TO CONSTITUTION

L. W. Hagmaier, Aspinwall, Sees No Possibility of Improving Such Now

GIVES HIS REASONS

HARRISBURG, Mar. 4.—L. W. Hagmaier, of Aspinwall, chairman of the Association of Boroughs Law Committee, told his fellow burgesses meeting here he doesn't believe a Constitutional convention called at this time would improve the State Constitution, but on the other hand might take away from local communities some of the home-rule rights they now enjoy.

"I don't believe they will be able to write one as good as they have got," Mr. Hagmaier said. "I'm afraid they'll start to play around with it and we will lose some of the home-rule privileges we have as boroughs. It's serious. I believe centralization of power is one of the most damnable things this country has to contend with."

Chairman Herbert B. Cohen, Democrat, of York, as chairman of the Liquor Board Investigation, refused point blank to tell the House how much his committee intends to pay for high-priced lawyers employed for the probe. A majority of the Democratic House members stood by him and insisted on giving the committee $25,000 for this purpose, instead of the $10,000 which the Republican members deemed ample.

Representative Ellwood J. Turner, of Delaware county, Republican, declaring $10,000 to be sufficient, said that the Pinchot utility probe, in which he participated, had been done without any appropriation, and that Chairman Morton Witkin, of the Republican Steering Committee, had conducted last year's highway investigation without the cost of a penny to the State. Turner agreed that the probe should have some money, but he thought that $25,000 was too much.

With seven members on the liquor committee, he said, he felt they could conduct the legal work themselves and save money for the taxpayers. He asked how many lawyers already had been employed and how much they were to receive. Cohen admitted that the committee had employed two attorneys, confessing that it was a blind contract and he did not know how much the State would have to pay for their services.

Witkin took up the argument, saying it was true he had acted as chairman and legal counsel in the highway investigation, without extra cost to the State, and thought the liquor probe should do as much. Both he and Turner said the investigation ought to be made, but that it could be made for not more than $10,000, and that the appropriation should be limited to that. Cohen insisted on $25,000 and the Democrats voted the bill through.

Republicans in the Senate will insist on knowing how much is being paid for outside lawyers before putting their approval on any appropriation.

Patriotic societies with a membership of more than 500,000 appeared before the Senate Committee on Constitutional Revision, at a meeting over which Senator G. Mason Owlett, of Wellsboro, Republican, presided, to oppose wholesale revision of the State Constitution.

The hearing occupied many hours and practically every patriotic society of prominence was represented by speakers. Briefly, they registered these points of opposition:

1. That any necessary changes should be made by amendment.
2. That at least 90 per cent of their members had registered decided opposition to the holding of a Constitutional Convention.
3. That the present Constitution, while perhaps requiring some change, should not be scrapped in favor of a

MAPLE SHADE HOUSE DAMAGED BY FIRE; LOSS PUT AT $1,000

Property Owned by M. J. Hill and Occupied by Edwin Kennedy

CAUSED BY STOVE PIPE

Furniture Saved by Firemen and Neighbors; Kennedy
Away at Time

Fire last night considerably damaged the bungalow occupied by Edwin Kennedy, Maple Shade, and owned by M. J. Hill. The loss is estimated at about $1,000. Six fire companies responded to fight the flames which were discovered by neighbors while Mr. Kennedy was visiting at a neighbor's house.

The bungalow contained four rooms and the structure was damaged on the outside, roof and practically gutted inside. The contents were saved. It is believed that the fire was due to a stove pipe.

When the flames were discovered fire companies were called from Bristol, Newportville, Newport, Hulmeville, South Langhorne and Croydon.

Neighbors and firemen removed most of the furniture and the firemen did good work in preventing the spread of the flames to nearby structures.

Wallace Beery Well Cast In "The Mighty Barnum"

P. T. Barnum, self-styled "Prince of Humbugs," comes back to a hearty life tonight and tomorrow at the Grand Theatre, in the person of Wallace Beery, who plays the matchless showman in "The Mighty Barnum."

The screen play maintains the comedy mood best suited not alone to Barnum's extravagant exploits, but to Beery's most popular type of characterization as well.

The story opens with Barnum's entrance into the sideshow business exactly a hundred years ago when, having acquired a few reptile monstrosities and an aged negress named Joice Heth, purported to be 160 years old and erstwhile nurse of the infant George Washington, he left his failing Bowers grocery, rented a livery stable and opened Barnum's American Museum.

The famous midget, General Tom Thumb, and his bride Lavinia, the Cardiff Giant, the Bearded Lady, the Fiji Mermaid, the Woolly Horse and all the rest of the "natural oddities" with which Barnum staggered New York a century ago are also seen. His splurge from the grotesque to the sublime with the sponsoring of the American debut of Jenny Lind, the lovely Swedish nightingale, at Castle Garden, plays a big part in the picture, with Virginia Bruce charmingly interpreting the golden-voiced Jenny.

POLICE TO OPEN DOG WAR HERE IN NEAR FUTURE

Owners of Licensed Dogs
Running at Large Are To Be Summoned

TO CATCH STRAY DOGS

Police will open a war on dogs in Bristol during this week, according to plans which are now in the making. Many complaints have been filed with the police department about dogs running at large with license tags and about dogs which are not licensed, but are running over lawns, private property and through the streets. Such dogs not only are a menace to the community but they endanger human life as well.

Owners of dogs not licensed are to be summoned to police headquarters and also owners of dogs which are licensed but which are running at large are likewise to be summoned. It is a violation of the law to permit dogs to run at large even though they be licensed.

All stray dogs are to be caught and disposed of in the proper manner and a relentless campaign is to be waged to rid Bristol of the dog nuisance.

HOSPITAL ROOM USED FOR WEDDING CEREMONY

J. Leslie Moss, Injured Last Tuesday, Takes Miss Elizabeth
Ellis As Bride

BY THE REV. HOWELL

A hospital room was the setting Saturday afternoon for an interesting wedding, the groom being a patient at the hospital, witnesses to the ceremony including relatives of the couple, nurses and the man's physician, with bouquets of cut flowers from the several rooms of the institution being used for decorations.

The ceremony was complete with a wedding march played on the famous music box loaned for the occasion by James Laughlin, Croydon's marrying squire; the officiating clergyman was the Rev. Clarence Howell, pastor of Bristol M. E. Church; and the groom made his way to the improvised "chapel" supported by two nurses.

The contracting couple was Miss Elizabeth Ellen Ellis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Francis G. Ellis, 416 Lafayette street; and Joseph Leslie Moss, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Moss, Locust street. The scene of the ceremony was in Harriman Hospital at four o'clock, where the groom was taken last Tuesday evening following an automobile accident at Mulberry and Pond streets, when he suffered a compound fracture at the base of the skull.

The groom was assisted to a place on the side of a bed for the ceremony. Witnesses included the mothers of the former Miss Ellis and Mr. Moss; as well as a sister of the groom, Mrs. Elwood King, Hulmeville; Dr. George T. Fox, and nurses of the hospital.

The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Katherine M. Ellis. The groomsmen was the twin brother of the bride, John F. Ellis.

The former Miss Ellis was garbed in an ensemble of navy blue tree bark crepe, and carried a bouquet of cut flowers. Her attendant wore a dress of navy blue crepe with collar of ashes of roses. Her accessories were of matching shades.

The wedding ceremony of Miss Ellis and Mr. Moss had been arranged for Saturday. After Mr. Moss sustained his injuries and his condition improved to the extent that the ceremony could be performed, plans were made to conduct the wedding at the hospital.

The couple will reside at their newly-furnished apartment on Wilson avenue. It is believed Mr. Moss will be discharged from the hospital in about three weeks.

Mr. Moss is a graduate of Rider College, Trenton, N. J., and Mrs. Moss graduated from Bristol high school in the February class, 1931. Both are employees at the Blue Moon hosiery mill, Croydon.

DID HE RENEGE

(By "The Stroller")

The price a Hulmeville councilman promised for any 1922 pennies that could be found for him dropped a few days ago—dropped so far in fact that he paid but 10 per cent of the amount he had previously stated. But he claims he made money on the "deal," although some of his pals are of the opinion he is "covering up."

When a discussion ensued about the value of 1922 pennies at a popular gathering place in Hulmeville borough, the said councilman informed those present that Henry Ford was so anxious to secure the "few remaining" 1922 pennies in circulation, that he would give a Ford car to anyone who would send him the desired coin. To back up his story the Hulmeville resident said "I'll give $5 to anyone of you who find such a penny and bring it to me." He was evidently surprised soon after when one of the men approached him with the wanted penny with a request for the $5. Heated discussion ensued, but the councilman finally agreed to pay fifty cents.

When said councilman made a visit at the gathering place the next day and was "razed" for his "fifty cent" penny, he informed that he had resold it for $1.50.

ARMED FLEET IS OFF

Athens, Greece, Mar. 4.—A heavily-armed fleet of 22 government bombing planes took off from the Island of Crete today to take four warships held by Greek insurgents in the Suda Bay. Apparently forewarned of the government's plan to launch a new attack, the rebels prepared to evacuate Crete and move to the ancient Island of Rhodes, off the coast of Turkey. The rebels' plan became known through an intercepted wireless message.

WANTS HAUPTMANN'S PLACE

Philadelphia, Mar. 4.—Another volunteer stepped forward today with an offer to go to his death in the electric chair in Trenton in place of Bruno Richard Hauptmann, convicted slayer of the Lindbergh baby. The new would-be substitute for the doomed Bronx carpenter is Anthony Cerrone, 33, of this city, jobless father of three children. Cerrone wrote to Governor Harold G. Hoffman of New Jersey offering to replace Hauptmann in the electric chair for $3,000. Cerrone's price is exactly half of that set by Stanley Pyskup of Brooklyn who offered to die in Hauptmann's stead for $6,000. A chauffeur who has been unable to find employment in four years, Cerrone said he wants $3,000 to establish a small business or trust fund for his wife and three children. He said: "My wife and children deserve a better break in life than I have been able to give them. I figure $3,000 would give them a good start in life. I hope to hear from Governor Hoffman soon."

ABANDONS DISARMAMENT

London, England, Mar. 4.—In a document that dealt in frank and unblushing terms with the military strength of Germany, the United States, Soviet Russia and Japan, Great Britain today abandoned disarmament as the key to universal peace and announced she was booming up her armed forces to the point "necessary for national security." The government's clear and emphatic recognition of the necessity of armament was set forth in a "white paper" issued by Prime Minister J. Ramsay MacDonald and his cabinet, explaining the government's national defense policy in connection with a debate on defense scheduled for March 9 in the House of Commons. It was issued a short while after the new military budget, calling for an expenditure of approximately $227,750,000 during the coming year, the highest figure since 1927, was placed before Parliament.

Injuries When Struck
By Hit-Run Driver

TAKEN TO HOSPITAL

A woman was run down by a hit and run driver early Saturday evening as she walked along the Newport road near West Bristol.

The injured woman is Mary Yoh, 39, West Bristol. Mrs. Yoh was walking along the side of the road near the residence of Dr. Edward J. Laing when a car traveling toward Bristol sidwiped her. Mrs. Yoh told Constable Joseph Seader that the car was traveling at the rate of between 50 and 60 miles an hour.

Mrs. Yoh was tossed to the ground and suffered contusions of the head, injuries to the chest, limbs and back. She also sustained brush burns of the face and may be injured inwardly.

The woman was found unconscious by Harold Boyd and Charles Duff, R. D. No. 2. She was taken to the Harriman Hospital and Constable Seader notified. The constable is making a check of motor vehicles in an effort to establish the identity of the driver of the car.

WILEY AND FARRELL BACK IN "PEN" AWAITING IN "KLONDIKE" SENTENCE OF COURT AFTER THEIR CONVICTION

Both Convicted of First Degree Murder With the Electric Chair As Penalty — Attorneys File Motion for Appeal and Court Grants Request, Setting 20 Days As The Time for the Hearing.

Martin Farrell and Frank (Babs) Wiley, convicted slayers of William Weiss, are back today in the Eastern Penitentiary, from which they escaped last summer by crawling through a sewer.

This time they are in "Klondike" under heavy guard, to await their final sentence of death. After that, they will be removed to the death house at Rockview Penitentiary.

The killers were taken to the penitentiary in the custody of Thomas Taylor, a penitentiary guard, and three State highway patrolmen, immediately after their conviction at Doylestown Saturday night.

"We are not going to take any chances with these men," said Captain Herbert Smith, warden of the penitentiary, last night. "They are going to stay put this time."

Webster S. Achey and John P. Betz, Jr., defense attorneys, were given 20 days by Judge Calvin S. Boyer to file briefs in their motion for a new trial.

District Attorney Arthur Eastburn announced that the other defendants, Marie McKeever, Robert Eckert and Joseph Coffey, probably will not be tried until the May term of court.

A jury of ten men and two women at Doylestown, who deliberated only three and a half hours, Saturday, declared both guilty of murder in the first degree and specified the two die in Pennsylvania's electric chair.

"Guilty of murder in the first degree with the death penalty."

Those words repeated over and over again as the jury was polled for each of the two men who have been on trial for the underworld killing during the last week, drilled into their minds the law's inexorable punishment for kidnapping and murder.

Wiley heard the repetition of words first, without change of expression in the courtroom.

But when he was led away he turned sick with nausea.

Farrell took it next, his face turning scarlet. But as he stepped out of the courtroom, he seemed resigned.

"It's a tough break," he said, "but I can take it. It's tough it had to be over a guy like Weiss."

Perhaps 500 persons, a Saturday night crowd, were in the quiet courtroom waiting when the jury entered.

Among them were "Big Buck" Mayser, sometimes described as business associate of the slain man, who passed $8000 ransom before Weiss was killed in the early morning of last November 6, and pallid Mrs. Lena Weiss, now a widow.

The mothers of the two condemned men were not present to hear the jury's words. They were here throughout the trial, but left in the late afternoon.

It was 8:20 p. m. The crier called for order.

The jurors filed in.

A little earlier Farrell had been talking to guards affably.

"No, crime don't pay," he had been saying.

"You only get into trouble but you get accused of a lot of things you never did."

He and Wiley were tense as the jurors took their seats.

"How say you?" Theodore Yocum, the court crier, intoned. "Do you find this defendant guilty or not guilty?"

He was speaking of Wiley, who was standing, his hands behind his back.

The foreman of the jury, Elmer B. Huber, Milford township farmer, spoke.

"Guilty," he said. "Death."

The last word caught in his throat. It was spoken so low that Judge Boyer failed to hear it.

"Guilty of what?" he asked. "What is the penalty?"

"Guilty of murder in the first degree, with the death penalty," said the foreman in a clearer voice, taking a grip on himself.

Wiley sat down. He was ordered to stand again.

At request of defense counsel the jury was polled. Their voices stuttered over and over again the words that condemned Wiley to death. There was many a voice that halted, as if in fright at the very words.

The utterances of the two women jurors rang out clearest and firmest of all.

And then Farrell stood up. And heard the same thing—over and over, and over.

Helmeted State troopers led him and Wiley from the courtroom, to be carried under machine-gun guard to the Eastern Penitentiary.

That was all there was to it. The hands of the courtroom clock stood at 8:29.

A week-long trial was over.

Just before the jury left the courtroom to deliberate the fate of the two, Judge Boyer with President Judge Hiram Keller sitting at his elbow, dispassionately recited the evidence and interpreted the law.

In his charge Judge Boyer drew the issue of the case clearly and concisely as he went through customary formality of explaining to the jury the differences between first degree and second degree murder.

"All those who join in a kidnapping," he said, "are guilty of murder in the first degree whether or not they were present at the actual murder and regardless of whether they disappeared."

Both Wiley and Farrell have, during the course of the trial, freely admitted to participating in the kidnapping.

The judge defined kidnapping as "spiriting a person away and holding him for ransom," and pointed out that in the present case, according to the evidence, Weiss was still in the condition of "being kidnapped" when he was shot and killed last November 6.

The faces of the two accused men noticeably brightened as Judge Boyer discussed the testimony of Robert "Flatnose" Eckert, professional load-dice maker, who as the State's chief witness pointed the finger of accusation at those who had been his pals in crime. Eckert, himself, is under indictment for the murder.

"It is only fair to say," observed Judge Boyer, "that Eckert in this case stands as an impeached witness. He is accused as an accomplice and his testimony should be regarded with caution."

"You may accept his testimony, however, if you believe it is true. I am going to ask you to use sound judgment and your best impressions in rendering the verdict, and fixing the penalty, basing your impressions, however, on the facts."

"You will render such a verdict as both your reason and your conscience approve."

The judge delivered his charge immediately after the District Attorney, in a voice that rang solemnly through the church-like courtroom, here, pressed for the extreme penalty.

"The evidence," District Attorney Eastburn said in his final plea, "shows that this murder was planned in advance—that these gangsters never intended to let Weiss go free after receiving ransom."

"Consider Eckert's story that he was sent to get fishplates (heavy iron devices for connecting railroad tracks) several days ahead of the murder. Do you believe the gang wanted them just merely to tie them on Weiss' legs to keep him away from their guns, as they said?"

"Isn't it more logical to assume that they wanted the fishplates to weight the body down and sink it in Neshaminy after the killing?"

He pointed to the various witnesses who saw and sketched the general movements of a stolen green automobile, found abandoned and stained with blood after the killing.

"Aren't you satisfied that was the car in which they carried Weiss to his death?" he asked the jurors.

"The defense says Wiley and Farrell had no intention of killing Weiss, that they thought he was being taken home. Do you believe that?"

The District Attorney grew indignant over defense intimations that the trial was held in Bucks county instead of Philadelphia for "show" purposes.

He concluded his argument with a plea to the jury to act "without fear."

"If you come to the conclusion that death is the proper punishment for these men, say so without hesitation. Say 'You two men have come to the end of the rope. This is a dead end for you.'"

"Let our verdict serve as a warning to all criminals to stay out of Bucks county."

In his plea for Wiley, Defense Attorney Achey said:

PERJURY

Canadian justice has caught up with one of the kidnapers of Labatt, the Ontario brewer. It has sent David Meisner, of Covington, Ky., gambler and police character to the penitentiary and has obtained an extradition order for one Piccolo Pete Murray, also of Covington.

The defense at Meisner's trial was an alibi, to be supported by two city detectives of Covington. Out of kindness for a pal in distress, one detective had testified that on August 14, 1934, the day of the abduction, he saw Meisner in a railway station at home. He fixed the date because he brought certain prisoners through the depot on that day.

Canadian investigators found that the incident took place a month later. Before the witness could be cross-examined, he and his fellow sleuth hopped out of Canada in the night time. Canada would like to talk to the two again, in reference to a possible charge of perjury.

A successful prosecution for perjury in our courts is something of a rarity. We tend to the liberal assumption that if a witness under oath is 30 days off on a date he is probably honestly mistaken. The superior of the Covington detectives says as much, although the truth was easily available by a look at the records of his department.

The search for truth by Canadian courts is swifter and surer than the same process here, because it dispenses with a mass of testimony which is not offered in good faith. Canada calls it perjury and treats it accordingly. The American perjurer crosses his fingers when taking the oath, and while the court may lift an incredulous eyebrow at his testimony, he can be sure that that is as far as the matter will go.

SMART BOY

An examination prepared by the Farm Credit Administration included a couple of trick questions put to applicants for jobs. The nifties were "How long is a piece of string?" and "How far can a dog run into the woods?" The applicant was expected to write "No answer" after each of these.

But an Iowa University student, taking the examination, replied to the first, "A piece of string is twice as long as the distance from the center to either end," and to the second, "A dog can run only half way into the woods. After that he is running out."

It is our idea that the master mind who invented the questions should be fired forthwith from the public service and the Iowa youth installed in his stead. If the first requisite in employees of the FCA is not familiarity with credit and farm conditions, but a barber shop wit, then plainly the applicant is faster at it than the Brain Trustee who formulated the examination. There should be no trouble about identifying the latter. He will be the fellow at FCA headquarters with the red face.

ECHOES OF THE PAST

By Courier Staff Member

Review of the news as it appeared in the Bucks County Gazette issue dated at Bristol, Sept. 4, 1873. The Gazette, a weekly newspaper published in Bristol, was discontinued following its merger with the Courier.

It was announced that a committee of Bristol Fire Company would solicit subscriptions to purchase a bell for the engine house. The necessity of adequate means for arousing the town in case of fire was fully apparent.

John Callanan, a well-known news agent on Mill street, sold over 700 daily, and 500 weekly papers, besides 60 magazines.

Delegates to the Bucks County Republican Convention, assembled at Doylestown on Tuesday, for the purpose of forming a judiciary and county ticket. Richard Watson, Esq., Doylestown, was nominated for associate law judge of the district; and S. E. Long for senator, both subject to the decision of the Northampton conference.

Henry Kretz and A. H. Clayton were nominated for assemblymen. The following county ticket was chosen: Associate Judge, Jesse Twining; district attorney, A. Fackenthal; treasurer, J. H. Worstall; commissioner, L. L. Jacoby; director, C. Fellman; auditor, A. K. Wambold; jury commissioner, J. VanBuskirk.

The Bucks County Bible Society held its annual meeting last Thursday. Rev. Hurley Baldy, Doylestown, conducted the services; and Bishop Stevens of Philadelphia, delivered the annual sermon. The report of the treasurer showed that the receipts of the society for the year were $183.12. The receipts at the meeting in addition were $117.95. The society resolved to employ a canvasser to collect funds and supply the destitute with Bibles. Officers were William Staveland, president; Rev. S. M. Andrews, D. D., secretary; and D. K. Turner, treasurer. It was announced that the society would hold its next meeting at Davisville on the last Thursday in August, 1874.

A number of communications were appearing in the local press favoring a water-works for Bristol borough, a more direct route between Bristol and Hulmeville, and the lowering of the street grade of the hill leading from Mill street to the boat wharf.

It was reported that quantities of iron ore had been found along the line of the Newtown Railroad.

The regular term of September court was scheduled to begin in Doylestown on Monday next. The criminal docket, larger than usual, listed 19 persons awaiting trial.

"More Money" by CHARLES GRANT

SYNOPSIS

Jasper Ingram, wealthy promoter, takes his secretary, lovely Cathleen, McCarthy to his "Grangeland" estate so he can transact business while attending the charity garden party given by his wife, Laura. Cathleen, the sole support of a large family, is fascinated by the surrounding luxury and wishes she could attend the party. Marian Alspaugh, the gold-digging wife of Homer Alspaugh, Ingram's confidential secretary, is a cigarette girl at the fete. She flirts with the Marques d'Alhues, Mrs. Ingram's special guest. Seward, Ingram's son, is infatuated with Arline Martin, an actress, but the ruthless Arline—realizing the senior Ingram could be more helpful in furthering her career—tries to impress the latter. Later, he calls at her apartment to listen to the reading of a play, the success of which means the arrival of herself and its author—the man she really loves. Failing to interest Ingram in the play, Arline tries to win him over by flirting boldly with him just as Seward arrives. The boy leaves in anger. Next day, at the office, Ingram tries to explain to his son, but the latter refuses to listen, referring to his father's other affairs. Seward tries to make an appointment with Cathleen but due to the difference in their social status, she refuses. The persistent Seward arranges with Alspaugh to let him know the next time Cathleen works over time and so meets her "by accident" at dinner. She finally agrees to an appointment. Mr. Ingram gives Cathleen's brother, Joe, a position.

CHAPTER XI

When it became plain that the royal lady to whose household the Marques d'Alhues was attached, must flee from Spain, he had taken command and had got her over the frontier by a surprise dash into Biarritz. Returning alone, he had salvaged what he could of his own possessions, including the family jewels, a few objects of art, and all the cash he could lay hands on. However officials on the frontier found and confiscated his jewels and gold. Fortunately they did not, in searching him, find the yards upon yards of precious lace wrapped about his waist.

Ever since, he had been living on that lace or more literally, upon the money he had received for it in London. Alas, now that fund, never large, was nearly exhausted. D'Alhues had been admirably fitted to his office in the Infanta's service. It had been necessary for him to understand all sorts of intricate points about precedence, etiquette, and tradition. To arrange and supervise—that had been his work, and he had been far from an idle man. Now idleness and a rapidly emptying exchequer were all he had left.

He thought of a good deal, accordingly, about the redoubtable Mrs. Alspaugh, who had met his overtures so warmly at the Ingrams' garden-party. There he had met other attractive women, but except for the interlude with the cigarette-seller, he had found himself constantly attached to his mature and stately hostess. As a result, the slim laughing person in pale chiffon intrigued him and he regretted his failure to find her before leaving Grangeland.

Marian, however, had no intention of letting their acquaintance languish.

When her excitement of the afternoon had died down, the image of the handsome Spanish Grandee was her most persistent memory. She simply had to see him again, and she let the social lines she had thrown out lie unswitched while she was held in the restless preoccupation of a romantic dream.

Ennui was eating at the soul of d'Alhues as he busied himself mounting new oaths with which to curse democratic Spain and bourgeois America. He was engaged at this pleasant pastime when, upon answering the phone, he was surprised to hear the flirtatious, high-pitched voice he had thought never to hear again. Lack of familiarity with the language, blinded him to the commonness of Marian's intonations and choice of words, but the voice itself had a pretty music, suggesting a genuine desire to please and provoke.

"I'm in town for the day, and nearly everyone I know is away. Won't you take pity on me and come to lunch? Don't say you have an engagement, Senor Marques!"

"If I had fifty engagements, would I let them stand in the way? You restore life to me, most kind lady."

Half hour later, Mrs. Alspaugh, not indifferent to the envious glances that followed them, led him to their table. Patterning her manner and the use of her eyes on those of a popular actress, whom she hoped she resembled, Marian kept him stimulated and charmed through the meal, over the remains of which they lingered smoking.

"I'm often in town," she said. "There's so little to do in the country. Mr. Alspaugh's always busy. But you, Senor Marques, what do you do with yourself all day? Wouldn't you like me to show you some of the sights?"

Marian, in common with most able cross. "He cares for nothing but business."

"Poor little dove," he sighed, laying his hands warmly on hers. "And I too am unhappy. Do you not see, as I do, a true happiness, a radiant happiness, within our grasp? Querida, queridissima, let us not deny the love that is springing in our hearts."

"I, the exile, demanding sympathy and beauty, and you so young, so lovely, so unappreciated—let us make each other's happiness! For that is the miracle of love, that out of two sorrows can be made one joy!"

Marian, unspeakably thrilled, was suffocated with her emotions. It was for moments like these, and for what followed them, that she lived. This delicious trembling, these shivers of anticipation, made up for the boredom, the annoyance, the frustration of every-day existence.

"Ah, Marques," she breathed,

"You are so beautiful, carissima mia," he said simply, gazing into her eyes.

New Yorkers, was woefully ignorant of the wonders of her own city. She was always planning to climb the Statue of Liberty or visit the Metropolitan Museum of Art. But she never did. Now accompanied by the handsome Spaniard, she made these trips of exploration and found them highly unsatisfactory intimacies.

Their circuit of New York in the sight-seeing yacht was more successful. By this time they were consciously, though unadmittedly, in love. They had reached the stage of meaningless talk since neither was interested in mere words, but was tensely alive to the revelations of eyes and gestures, to the exciting communications of their throbbing senses.

The yacht was the scene of d'Alhues' first open declaration. Not many people were on the boat, and they were sitting alone on the unpopular side. This gave him an opportunity to abandon pretense and to put in words the emotion in which each was absorbed.

"You are so beautiful, carissima mia," he said simply, gazing into her eyes.

Marian smiled, veiling her eyes. "And better than beautiful—desirable, troubling, unforgettable—you are not like other Americans I have met. You are adorably a woman. Ah, you, like the women of my own country, could live for love. Yes, you are American, too, and that adds piquancy. Answer me one question, lovely lady—your husband—"

"Oh, let's not talk of him," she said suggesting by tone and look that Homer was an almost unbearable

"only you men of the old world know how to make love!"

"Because our old world has wisdom—we know where the true significance of life is to be found. Money—bah! Something so base and forget. Love and death, death and love, only these two have meaning and power. Tell me, mi corazon, that you love me!"

Marian reached Long Island that afternoon only a few minutes before Homer arrived. Her face was still scorching with d'Alhues' passionate kisses.

While driving out, she had lived with him, in spirit, in a ridiculous old castle in Spain. By contrast with this imagined Elysium, the conditions of her actual life seemed so stale, so sordid, that she could have wept in self pity at the fate that obliged her to stop at the railway station, among the other wives of commuting husbands, to pick up Homer, to submit to his unwanted kiss—sacrilege, on top of those who so hotly remembered—and to sit opposite him through dinner, listening to his dull garrulity.

After dinner he sat down before the radio to listen to a talk on business conditions. The loud authoritative complacent voice was intolerable to Marian, in whose ears were the wooing cadences of the enamored Spaniard.

"My head aches!" she snapped. "I'm going to bed, and for God's sake, turn that thing down and keep it down."

For more than an hour Marian lay repeating the words of her lover and dreaming of the ecstasy that lay so immediately in the future.

SPRING CLOTHING HAS EXCEEDINGLY INTERESTING FEATURES

By Rhonda A. Armstrong (Home Economics Representative)

Dark blue appears each spring as regularly as the season itself. Accustomed as we are to it, it is always welcome. There is something cool and refreshing about this color, following the blacks and warm browns and reds of the winter wardrobe.

Surfaces of the spring woollens and silks are of great interest. The woollens have a lacy weave or, if woven more firmly, have little knots or nubs to give a rough surface. They are lightweight, of course, and colorful, giving a fresh accent to the winter costume as well as being suitable for wear later without a coat.

Crepes of silk or of synthetic materials are also rough of surface, having either a crinkled or a blistered surface. Some give the appearance of shirred. When the material itself is so interesting, dresses themselves are simple in design.

Trimming touches, such as scarfs, collars, cuffs, belts, and fastenings are very interesting. Dyed lace is used for scarfs, bows, flowers, and even handkerchiefs.

There is no end to the variety of buttons and, in addition, hooks, chains, loops, clothes pins, and cords offer something new. A cotton dress might have the belt fastened with two very large buttons, each of a different color.

Campbell Drives Stock Hudson To New Record

Seven new official stock car records were established on the Daytona Beach sands last Monday when Sir Malcolm Campbell, driving a Hudson sedan fully equipped stock model, broke the previous flying start marks for one to five miles and one to ten kilometers. Softness of the beach cut at least two miles an hour from the new record, Sir Malcolm stated, but the attempt could not be delayed for more favorable conditions on account of preparations for his world speed trials in the Bluebird. Beach conditions made the stock car runs even more tests of ruggedness than of speed, it was stated.

Shortly after the famous Britisher set the new speed marks, Buddy Marr, of Detroit, took the same Hudson sedan on the Daytona course for new stock car records for the mile from standing start and for both the kilometer and mile in second gear. These two latter tests in which Marr sent the sedan over a measured mile in second gear at the phenomenal speed of 70 miles per hour, was considered the most punishing of the entire series. It shattered the previous record by more than 7 miles per hour.

Sir Malcolm was enthusiastic over the Hudson's performance, stating at the conclusion of the run. "It is a remarkable motor, very smooth and powerful. What amazes me most is the way the car is unaffected after the way it has been slammed around in preparation for the run. I want to congratulate the Hudson Company on the performance of the car."

Much of the credit for the new record from standing start was due to the quick shifting accomplished by the "Electric Hand," according to Buddy Marr. "Fast shifting," he stated, "is certainly of the greatest importance in covering a mile from standing start in 32 seconds."

The several records established by the Hudson stock model were: Flying start mile, 88.2028 m. p. h.; flying start kilometer, 88.207 m. p. h.; flying start five kilometers, 88.195 m. p. h.; flying start five miles, 88.051 m. p. h.; standing start one mile, 68.252 m. p. h.; flying start one kilometer in second gear, 70.319 m. p. h.; flying start mile in second gear, 69.224 m. p. h. Excepting only the latter mark, which was seven miles an hour faster than the previous record, all of the new marks bettered the existing ones by approximately two miles an hour.

The runs were over the same course and with the same elaborate timing device that Sir Malcolm will use for his runs with the Bluebird. The marks are official, the tests having been supervised by the AAA. The representatives in charge were T. E. Allen, secretary of the AAA Contest Board; Warren Baker, Chief steward of the Contest Board; Odia Porter, electrical timing expert, and T. E. (Pop) Myers, referee of the Contest Board. They selected the car for the tests from the showroom of the Hudson and Terraplane distributor in Jacksonville.

Wiley and Farrell Back In "Pen" Awaiting Sentence

"Neither one of these men had any intention of killing Weiss on the night of November 5.

"The Commonwealth, ladies and gentlemen, has given no reason why these two defendants would want to destroy Weiss. They had no motive.

"But there were others who had reasons. One of them was Legenza. It was not until that night that they learned Legenza wanted to kill Weiss. They protested and Legenza said, 'We'll see about that,' and told them to get into the machine. They started out in the direction of Philadelphia. Is there any reason to assume that in their minds they believed Weiss was being taken down in the city to be released?"

Achey then argued the very manner in which the bullets entered the body of Weiss showed that Wiley could not have fired either of the fatal bullets.

"I say, my friends, that Joe Legenza was the killer. Joe Legenza was the man who wished to destroy Weiss to avenge the death of his friend 'Big George' Kauffman, who was killed by Weiss in Pittsburgh. Can you believe anything else?"

"Can you believe this man Eckert, this skunk who made loaded dice, this skunk who used opium? He had a motive in accusing these men on the witness stand.

"He was the man who planned this kidnapping, the man who planned it for 10 per cent. He is a defendant in this case. He was jointly indicted with these men. He, too, should be on trial now. But he has turned State's evidence.

"He has used opium. That affects a man's mind. How could he go on the stand and tell a truthful story of events that occurred while he was using opium?"

"Can you believe this Judas Iscariot who took his ten per cent and then turned on his very companions in this case?"

Achey then asserted that the defendants were being tried in Bucks county because the State conceived a possibility of making a better "side show." Judge Boyer interrupted, reprimanding the attorney.

"You are abusing the officers of this county, Mr. Achey," he said. "I suggest that you argue on the basis of the evidence."

Achey continued with criticism of police who investigated the Mais gang. "Detective Lieutenant Thomas McGorian," he said, "was on the witness stand this morning and asserted that he had no knowledge whatever about Weiss' character or business. Why, anybody who visits City Hall frequently was bound to pick up information about Weiss.

"Lieutenant McGorian is either peculiarly ignorant of these matters or he is withholding information for reasons of his own. Well, for that we will forgive him."

Concluding, Achey said: "There is not sufficient evidence in this case, my friends, to condemn these defendants to burn. There is not enough evidence for the extreme penalty."

On behalf of Farrell, Betz said: "The Commonwealth's ace in the hole in this case is this man Eckert. He is as slippery as a rat, this self-confessed opium addict, once charged with murder in another case, a dope fiend who would blame this crime on his own mother if it were necessary for him to get out of it.

"His testimony is not worth considering. The State's star witness—a dope fiend—the lowest-down of all underworld characters.

"Remember, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, these two men, Farrell and Wiley, are the only living humans who know when and where the fatal shots were fired, and who fired them. The others on that death ride are themselves silenced by death—Mais and Legenza—by execution for another crime, and Weiss by murder.

"Much of the evidence in this case comes from a polluted source. Farrell and Wiley have told you, and they are entitled to every bit of your consideration, that they pleaded with Legenza to spare Weiss' life. These men were not armed and could not have killed Weiss.

"Eckert says he did not sell out these men. That is for you to determine. He is charged with murder. Don't forget that.

"Eckert is the kind who plans these crimes, but he would rat on his own mother for 10 per cent., like he got in this case.

"We are not asking for an acquittal in this case. The verdict should be one of second degree murder, if you are convinced they are guilty. In this courtroom since Monday have been sitting two aged women, the mothers of these defendants. They were here when you as jurors, were drawn, and they will be awaiting your verdict."

Judge Boyer interrupted to caution the attorney that there has been no evidence entered concerning the mothers of the two defendants.

Before the attorneys began their arguments the final witnesses in the trial came to the stand. Among them was Detective Captain John J. Creedon, of Philadelphia, who, as a rebuttal witness, told of a "crime wave" the Mais gang had planned.

"Farrell talked to me about banks that he looked over to see if they could be taken," Captain Creedon said.

"Farrell said that he had looked over the bank at 60th street and Lansdowne avenue, and that other Philadelphia banks that were looked over included those at 58th street and Baltimore avenue, 6th street and Erie avenue, and 40th street and Lancaster avenue.

"He told me it was his idea to rob a Sears-Roebuck mail truck and outlined the place where it was to be held up and when.

"Mais, Legenza, Wiley and Farrell composed the quartet that was to hold up the banks and the trucks."

On the witness stand briefly at the outset of the trial, Farrell denied he had ever made such admissions or that he had participated in any scheme of wholesale hold-ups.

The two men who had been State witnesses were called as defense witnesses. They were Agent Joseph McDewitt, of the United States Department of Justice, and Detective Lieutenant Thomas McGorian, of Philadelphia. Through McDewitt it was established that Weiss was arrested for possessing narcotic drugs in 1917.

McGorian declared that he "knew nothing whatever" concerning Weiss' habits and interests in narcotics.

"I heard he was in the liquor business," the policeman said.

Constitution of unknown quality framed in a time of great popular unrest with all chances against mature deliberation and wise judgment.

4. That they were grateful to their own ancestors for not shouldering them with the expense of meeting the hardships of those earlier days and did not want to put upon their own children the cost of meeting the difficulties of today.

They served notice they would openly oppose any attempt to hold a Constitutional convention at this time, and were particularly opposed to the plan to elect delegates to such a convention along political lines.
